AND FINALLY -

May we as teachers keep ever before us the golden thoughts of Professors Frasier and Armontrout -

"A teacher must realize that one of the qualities that make for success in carrying out a sound philosophy of education is the ability to see his job as it is related to the people in the midst of whom he is working. He must be prepared to utilize every activity of the child's life--both in school and out-toward the great end of educating the child, and he must be ready and willing to help spread the influence of the school into every channel and corner of the community life".

Yours truly,

W. R. Banks
