YOUR WEEK

Mr. Duria Henderson: Gentleman

Mr. Duria Henderson is the baker in Prairie View's dining hall. There is little unusual about Mr. Henderson's being a baker except that he is a good one. Modern day bakery shops with their mechanical splendour and clinical cleanliness are a far cry from the stone ovens of early man. Mr. Henderson's shop is clean, neat, orderly, and efficiently managed.

Last Wednesday morning, much earlier than Prairie View's most insomniac rooster began to crow, Mr. Henderson noticed smoke coming from beneath the hood of one of the automobiles parked within view from the bakery shop window. Quickly he ran out of his shop, raised the hood and placed some shorted wires a safe distance from the radiator metal. He then proceeded to tape the wire, replace an ambitious screw, see that all else was in order and went back to the warm spicy air of his shop. Although the automobile belonged to an employee of the dininghall the selflessness with which Mr. Henderson worked indicated that he would have done the same for an automobile belonging to any person.

Sometimes Prairie View people are like that, and when they are they live up to the best within them. People who do little things to help other people do far more for themselves. Mr. Henderson's act was small, yes, but when you bundle a lot of little kindnesses as you would fagots there is developed bonds of such strength that neither acquisitive men nor time can easily break
