YOUR WEEK

Also Noted: A Coco Mat

To be asked to attend a committee meeting in the orderly office of our meticulous librarian, Mr. O. J. Baker, is to be asked to meet in comfortable, pleasant surroundings. He usually provides a pencil, a piece of paper or two for hieroglyphic-making, and for those who pay homage to the nicotine goddess, an ash tray. Underfoot is a seemly green rug which silences the scuffling of men's feet around the conference table, and, one may suppose, might prove restful for ten cramped toes if they could escape from their leather-encased prisons.

One of a committee of four persons, the culprit, had long before noted these things with genuine admiration, but it was not until last Thursday evening that he noted the serviceable coco mat at the doorway to this gentlemen's office. After the meeting had begun this thoughtless person noticed that every time he moved his feet a deposit of Prairie View's finest sand was left on the handsome green rug. Had the culprit's small son been guilty of such action he would have been severely reprimanded. As it was apologies, often futile but proper, were made, and the culprit walked out after the meeting knowing that men are really nothing more than grown-up little boys.

Moral: If asked to attend a meeting in Mr. Baker's office, be sure and make use of the light brown coco mat at the doorway.
