YOUR WEEK

On Seeing A Duel In The Sun

The rather large audience which turned out for "A Duel in the Sun" last Friday evening was treated to one of the most purely animalistic orgies yet produced in Hollywood. It was an ugly picture, for all its technicolor beauty because it showed without rhyme or reason the brutish, lustful animal any man can be if he fails to nurture that spark of humanity which links him to a possible personal immortality, and to our universe. It was an ugly picture because it portrayed a woman whose reserve had been shattered leaving little but the animal, that is in all of us, to inhabit the physical body which at one time housed love, a desire for understanding, and the potential for purposeful living. You somehow left the theatre with the feeling that your time had been ill spent. With the exception of Mr Vidor's direction, usually excellent in such big productions, and the elegance of the sets, duly recorded by the camera, "A Duel in the Sun" was better left undone, or unseen.

It is not intended to imply that the "Duel" was not drawn from real life, it probably was, but most of us know so well those pages which tell about the sordidness of human living that further publicity is not needed. Grandiose as it was the picture was an enormous waste of time, money, and effort - a monument to nothing.
