Life is beautiful, and for all we know, death is just as good. And death, science shows, is in itself a form of life.

The man who lives well is the one who is willing to go or stay. And the man who is willing to go or stay, stays quite a while. John Calvin and John Knox had a deal to do with devising and formulating a religion of sorrow, and each died old at fifty-seven. Unfortunately, they took themselves seriously, attempting to say the final word. And any one who does this is suffering from arterio-sclerosis of his think-cells. Life is fluid; and nothing is permanent but change.
