YOUR LEEK

Mr Mack Washington, Sr and the Tapping Machine

A tapping machine is a device employed by plumbers to "cut" holes in water or gas mains so that service may be extended to new areas. Our machine is very old, having been in use some thirty years, and designed, therefore, at a time when brawn and brain were needed for operation of mechanical devices. Three men took turns at using the bit which "cut" into the water main when it was tapped for piping water into our Recreation Hall. "The man who finally "hit water" was Mr. Mack Lashington, Senior.

Mr. Washington is an elderly man, but he seems to be able to do an eight hour day with men much younger than hinself. His hands are large, a bit worn here and there, but they are good hands - they are functional. It is with such hands that Prairie View's physical plant was built, and is being maintained. Latching Mr. Mashington work you would notice his hands first, but they tell only half the story - his face tells the rest.

There is a dignity about Mr. Washington's face, a dignity which seems to be real rather than superficial. Etched there is neither high-flown optimism nor the pessinism of a defeatist, but straightforward acceptance of the rules of a rather grim game - life. Mr. Washington is a plumber by trade, and a good one. He would, in fact, be good at any thing he tried, not spectacular, just solid and good.

How about you? Do you use the tools of your trade as well as Mr. Lashington uses a tapping machine? Or are you just being spectacular?
