G. IN CLOSING

All colleges and universities today face manifold, heavy and complex problems. They stem from three principal sources:

1. The spiraling numbers of young people seeking admission to our institutions of higher learning.
2. An explosion in knowledge which is pushing back intellectual frontiers at a constantly increasing rate.
3. The growing complexity of our social and economic structure resulting in increasing demands for a constantly higher level of competence on the part of all members of our society.

Very truly yours,

E. B. Evans
President
