F. IN CLOSING

The Challenges in American Education--and perhaps the most complex problems ever faced by the United States--include "How to secure a good teaching force, to retain it, to keep it up-to-date, and to distribute the educational opportunity represented by good teaching until it is within the reach of every young American."

All of us at Prairie View must feel this challenge and be prepared to contribute in every possible way to the solution to these problems. We are particularly concerned about "the extension of educational opportunities to all." Let us re-dedicate ourselves to this task as we begin the new school year.

Very truly yours,

J. M. Drew
President
